

Anti-theft windows that can be used as lockers

Do burglar-proof windows & doors prevent theft?

To prevent theft, creating burglar-proof windows and doors in your home will deter criminals from gaining entry. While most burglars gain entry through doors, the second most common area susceptible to break-ins is first-floor windows. Second-floor windows are more difficult to reach and far less likely to be the source of a criminal's attack.

Are burglar-proof windows a good way to protect your home?

Once windows have been secured, homeowners will want to consider other home security tips to turn their property into a virtual fortress. One of the best ways to protect your home is with burglar-proof windows. From installing entry sensors to upgrading locks, here's how to easily secure your property.

What is window security film?

However, window security film is a type of window film that's all about safety, as it helps prevent glass from shattering during an attempted break-in. If an intruder discovers a home with robust window locks and entry sensors, the only way to get inside is by smashing through the glass.

Are window locks a good idea?

Window locks are relatively inexpensive, making them a frugal way to improve window security. Residents can also check the screws holding their window lock in place, as these can become loose over time and could become a weak point for intruders to enter the home.

Does glass security protect windows and doors?

Unlike security bars, transparent glass security solutions can provide nearly unnoticeable protection for windows and doors. Installing unobtrusively over existing glass doors and windows, glass security protection can take many forms -- all of which provide reliable burglar protection.

How do burglar-proof windows work?

Because of this, burglar-proof windows must include entry sensors and glass-break sensors. "Entry and window sensors are key factors in preventing break-ins, especially as an overwhelming majority of burglars enter a home through a door or first-floor window," says Nye. Entry sensors trigger an alarm when a window is opened.
