Should microlectures be used in a flipped classroom?

Furthermore, microlectures lend themselves well to the flipped classroom approach, where students are introduced to course concepts outside of class so that they can use class time to focus on higher-order tasks, such as applying and analyzing (Scagnoli, 2012). Professors can also design microlectures so that they inform the class content.

How can faculty create microlectures?

There are many different tools that faculty can use to create microlectures. For example, a professor can use the built-in camera on their phone or laptop to record a simple "talking head" video where they are speaking directly to the camera (Scagnoli, 2012; Costa, 2020, 70-71).
